men at the Chamber of Commerce today was discussed at length was the statement of C. H. Jones of Boston, who as chairman of the transportation committee of the Boston Merchants Association, has made an exhaustive study of the situation at present, and of the results to New England industries should the western roads take from New England the freight rate differentials which are now enjoyed.

The meeting was called to order at 11:30 this forenoon by James J. Storrow, who welcomed the visiting representaives of New England trade associations, and he was followed by Bernard J. Rothwell of the Chamber of Commerce. Resolutions were adopted at the forenoon session and adjournment was made for luncheon at the Parker House after the delivery of Mr. Jones' speech.

Mr. Jones in opening his remarks referred to the threats which it is alleged have been made by the officials of western roads and of their meeting in New York when but a single vote had stood between the shippers of New England and the loss of their differential rates on westbound freight.

"Such of us," he said, "as have attempted to keep in touch with transportation matters, for the benefit of the industries we represent, were shortly besieged with inquiries from interested friends and anxious shipers. The Mayor Brown Orders De-Sunday papers wanted to know what it all meant, and what we were going to do about it, and taken all together, it is fair to say that for a quiet Sabbath morning, quite a genuine sensation of alarm and warning had been created.

"Such a state of affairs is intolerable. If the business men of New Engage not accept this incident as sufficient no tice, and get together in some form of effective organization, for the protection of their interests as merchants and shippers, then not only public spirit but private interest is dead among us, and we may as well make up our minds to accept such privileges and opportunities in regard to transportation as these railroad managers may see fit, in the development of their own interest, to bestow

Railroads have during recent years come much more largely into control of a few great financiers, and the interstate nerce commission has undertaken to regulate more strictly traffic and enforce the laws against rebates and discrimination, with the result that compe tition is very greatly reduced, and rates are not now easily disturbed. "While the roads may be within their legal rights in making arrangements of this sort, such adjustments are certainly not in the interest of shippers or the public, and this tendency calls for continual watchfulness and makes impera tive a state of preparedness on the part of our commercial organizations that we have never before considered necessary.

This view is, of course, rigiculed here. The present Austro-German intimacy is mainly, though not wholly, born of the present consolidation in Europe, according to the prevailing opinion. Notwithstanding the recent pro-German, or rather pro-Prussian effervescence, Austria is anxious for a really close treaty with such a henomenally growing power as Germany as a safeguard against the prolonged uncertainty of international relations.

It has, of course, been widely noticed and agreeably commented on, that during the late crisis the direction of affairs GERMANS TO HEAR lay with Austria, even though from a broader standpoint the actual victory was Germany's. This is generally at tributed to the eleverness of Baron Aehrenthal, but also to the fact that Emperor William kept a great deal more in the background than he had in the past. Thus Prince Bulow was able to display all his snave policy which insured perfectly smooth work between Berlin and Vienna.

During the past week Chandler & Co. gave a most impressive demonstration of original designing by their own milliners, also a most comprehensive exhibit of their reproductions of Imported Hats which were characterized as not only equal to, but in many instances superior to, the French and Viennese Models.

Chandler & Co. Now Announce a Great After Easter linery Presentation

Which will present for their first showing 300 New Hats marked at the following special prices:

22.50 20.00 17.50 15.00 25.00

The values of these Hats average about 40 per cent more than the marked prices and the sale is made possible at this early date by reason of an unexpected arrival of the most remarkable shipment of French millinery materials ever received in Chandler & Co.'s department. These materials came via New York and were turned over to Chandler & Co. by one of the great New York importers. The prices were so low and the materials of such magnificent quality that these Hats, all by Chandler & Co.'s own milliners, are in every detail of style and effect veritable French Hats at Less than Import Cost.

Public-Spirited Men of Boston Declare That Slack Management of Accounts Has Mixed City Finances

Robert Luce Recognizes the Necessity for Important Action by Legislature to Remedy the Matter.

Lively interest is manifested in the first recommendation of the "Boston-1915" committee in the reforms it purposes to accomplish by that time, that of uniform and improved accounting for municipal affairs. On this subject the following expressions have been obtained by The Christian Science Monitor from men who have been active in such work

ROBERT LUCE, ex-representative from Somerville-It is now generally admitted that municipal accounts should be so handled as to enable comparisons between cities and to let any citizen of average training understand the essentials of city transactions. What further legislation may be necessary to carry out these ideas should be enacted forth-

A more difficult problem is that of determining whether the municipal or state accountant should have any powers' of supervision or discretion. As a member of the legislative committee on ways and means, it was brought home to me that our state auditor is not expected to scrutinize expenditures or make question as to their propriety. Likewise, city auditors in Massachusetts have no responsibiliti-7 in the way of investigation.

While of course accounting officers should not receive what would be virtuany the power of .egislation if they were authorized to block expenditures absolutely, I incline to the belief that they ought to be given some power of scrutiny and investigation, such as that exercised by comptrollers in other states.

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS, attorney and publicist-The Boston 1915 plan submits as the first plank in its platform "to have an expert accounting of the financial condition and resources of the city, present and prospective, and so clearly stated, explained and illustrated that the man in the street may understand." Cherbuliez rightly said "Arithmetic is the mother of safety." A disregard of this simple truth accounts for a large part of the financial difficulties with which we are faced in Boston today. To begin right in building up, we must know exactly where we stand; and it must be known, not to a few, but widely. It is one of the finest incidents of democracy that it necessarily involves for its sucess the education of the whole people.

If Boston is to live within its means, as in the long run it must, the people of Boston must understand its financial possibilities, and there is no insuperable difficulty in making them understand. The real financial situation of Boston, when it has been fully ascertained, can be made so clear that all its citizens may understand as to the whole city what they have to understand for themselves, namely, the limits of possible expendi-

The discrepancies he is almost certain to find will be generally due to differences in classification, absence of harmony in the use of terms and of accounting systems between the department and the auditor's office.

The citizen is naturally somewhat confused by this state of affairs and he is hardly satisfied with the explanation of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. A pilthat the difference is merely one of classification. What is needed is a uniform classification, so that the various departments when using the same words, will at least mean the same things. The absence of such uniformity between different departments of the same city is not only unnecessary, but tends to discredit the value of public documents, which ought to be the source of trustworthy information. It is to be hoped that by 1915 this state of affairs will have passed away and that all the departments of the city disbursements of the last fiscal year ment of the city auditor, who, as the and other items relating to debts, assets, official approving the bills, ought to be the recognized authority upon these

Veteran Defenders to Honor Motherhood

NEW YORK-Gen. Henry M. Nevius, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, has issued a general order that every Union veteran of the civil war wear a white arnation in his buttonhole on May 9, the day when the nation will unite in paying tribute to motherhood. Everywhere the white carnation, appropriately selected as the symbol of the day and its meaning, will be in evidence.

Not only the veterans, but their sons will join in the observance of the day. Edgar Allen, Jr., commander-in-chief of the Sons of Veterans, has issued a similar order. In line with the veterans heads of many large corporations will supply their employees with white carnations and ask that they wear them all through the day. Appeal will be made by the orig-

BOSTON BEAUTIFUL CRITICISM BY ELIOT AWAKENS SURPRISE

Sentiment Seems to Be That Harvard's President Does Not Comprehend the Nature of the Plan.

Surprise is expressed at the statements made by President Charles W. Eliot Monday, in which he says that the "Boston-1915" plan begins at the wrong end. Some think that Dr. Eliot has not caught the feeling of the movement, or else that he does not wholly understand it. Others think his ideas are imprac-

Louis D. Brandeis of the Boston-1915 committee says that he does not think Dr. Eliot could have been perfectly familiar with the "Boston-1915" improvement plan when he saw that the committee in charge of the work was beginning at the wrong end. In regard to Dr. Eliot's statement to the effect that the center of all action for imrovement must be the Massachusetts state Legislature Mr. Brandeis said that, of course, an act of the Legislature is necessary, but that the great volume of support should come from the citizens and business men themselves. In continuing, Mr. Brandeis briefly explained the purpose of the plan for making Boston the most beautiful city in the world, saying that in the first place the plan in its larger sense is one for developing the greater possibilities of Boston, getting at the very foundation of things and utilizing to the fullest capacity the natural resources, a thing t being done at the present time.

Mr. Brandeis went on to say that one of the ideas of the proposed reform is to make closer relations between capital and labor, better housing for labor and in a nutshell to make at possible to give more for the money in every way.

In reference to Dr. Eliot's expression that to beautify the city when its charter needed attention was bad, Mr. Brandeis said that the beautifying and bettering of the city and the overhauling of the charter should go hand in hand.

Another view appears in a criticism offered by Street Commissioner James A.

"Why should we talk of beautifying the streets of the city when we cannot afford to take over many of the new streets in the suburban sections, where the only expense involved would be that of laying out and grading?" he said.

"When Napoleon III. tore down the old buildings and transformed the crooked streets of medieval Paris into boulevards he had a nation behind him. Paris may be France; Boston is not America. We more marred by its own defects. Loyalty, declared a famous statesman, consists in standing by a man when he is wrong; any one can stand by him when he is right. Anybody, of course, can stand by a man when he is right, but, as a matter of | fact, the majority of people prefer standing by right when it s in a majority. "You may know," Mrs. Eddy very wisely writes, on page 225 of Science and Health, "when first Truth leads by the fewness and faithfulness of its followers." Faithful as Peter was, faithful unto death as he one day proved himself to be, he yet shrank from the accusation "thy speech betrayeth thee"; that lesser men should hesitate then is not wonderful. There is in reality hardly and length to which men's misconception of loyalty will not carry them until they are lost in a Walpurgis night of infamy, so that it may be said of them as of Launcelot:

"His honor rooted in dishonor stood, And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true." The very fact of this, it might be that there must be something fundamentally wrong with its conception of loyalty, yet, blind as Samson, it blunders on, often repudiating the explanation which would save it, and insisting dience to Truth gives man power and in pulling its house down on its own strength. Garden in the Backyard

WE have discoursed upon "the backyard beautiful" and "the backyard dreadful," and now we propose to call attention to "the backyard useful." There is enough sunny land growing weeds in Norwich every year to put fresh-grown vegetables and fruits on the table of the working classes at the least possible cost in labor. Any workman who has in the rear of the house a lot of sunny land as large over as a dining table may grow radishes, lettuce and string beans, or rhubarb and currents and gooseberries, blackberries or raspberries, without making a drudge of himself, says the Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin. Sown broadcast to lettuce and radishes, it will give green stuff all summer. Four square feet of New Zealand spinach planted in a yard will give a family greens-good greensonce or twice a week the season through. Three rows of string beans, 12 feet long and four feet apart, will yield many messes of better beans than can be bought at the store. Then there are beets and turnips and tomatoes which thrive with a little care. There is not only truck in it for the table, but exercise, open air and improved health for those who work the land. A garden of pretty flowers for decorating the house may be as easily grown. Move with intelligence-use the hoe freely, and as Izaak Walton remarked, "Use the hoe as if you loved it."

Commercial Travelers and Language Study

The secret of Germany's success in ommerce is explained in Van Norden's Magazine as extremely simple, and the wonder is that Germany's competitors have never profited by her example.

Germany simply speaks the languages of the countries with which she deals and adopts their customs for her own while necessary. No German commercial salesman would dream of going to South America to dispose of his goods and expect to succeed in the German tongue. He speaks Spanish, or Portuguese, as the case may demand; he wears the garb of the native, he wastes time in siestas, he eats what his associates eat. In short, he becomes one of Likewise, when he goes to Canton, or Shanghai, or Hong Kong, he does not go there as a stranger. Before he leaves Germany he speaks Chinese, which he has learned at one of the many commercial schools from native teachers. In Shanghai will be found German commer cial salesmen whose costume and method of living are so identified with the country that they are hard to recognize as Germans. Thus they deal directly with the merchant instead of by the roundabout way of the interpreter, and thus they succeed.

When a German merchant wishes to send a representative to China he has at his command a man educated thoroughly in commercial lines, who can speak and write the language of the country to which he is accredited, and who will, to the most minute detail, observe the customs of the people.

Naval Heroes

rather than American protection.

When that proud squadron filed past the many ports of Chile, from Punta Arenas to Arica, where such display of power had never been seen, one thought must have dominated the marveling crowds assembled on the shores; the query of what that power stood for. No man or woman, cultured or illiterate, but asked themselves and others if in the end it meant to them aggression or protection. Whatever the official greetings, whatever the extent of popular courtesy, there is hardly room for doubt that to the "Yankees of the South," or at least the great majority of the Chilenos, the passage of the fleet conveyed American imperialism

Not many months passed by and the Chileans experienced American naval heroism not in aggression but in protection. At a fire which threatened the existence of the port and town of Coquimbo, just north of Valparaiso, the Tennessee sent her officers and men to help save the town and two men distinguished themselves by such extraordinary bravery that the commanding officer reported that "no heroism could have been surpassed by theirs without being unpardonable rashness." And so a general order has just been issued at the navy department awarding medals of honor and gratuities to George H. Wheeler and William H. Gowan, the fire fighters of Coquimbo, Chile, on Jan. 20, 1909.

It is indeed the glory of Anglo-Saxon naval tradition that its might is the might of protection, not of aggression. Britain's fleets have rendered and are rendering to peace and progress, trade and research, services that will never be even approximately realized or appreciated, while it was solely the thought of protection, the might of right, which carried the squadron around the world on what was and is the most superb naval feat since the great navigators. Against this steadfast thought of protection the aggression that may have lurked in the Pacific was powerless.

It is said that the world tour of the squadron proved the greatest stimulus to shipbuilding in our times; that never before have so many of the smaller nations conceived such large naval programs. Let the builders take inspiration not from the sinews but rather from the thought.

It is not announced as yet whether Walter Wellman, during his coming polar trip, is going to carry his balloon in his schooner or his schooner in his balloon. Everything, however, is bound to become public in time.

Something which fifty years ago could hardly be conceived of in the most venture-some of imaginations is threatening the existence of the highlands of the Hudson river, extending down the stream from Newburgh, a distance of twenty miles, and constituting the predominant feature of a stretch of scenery which is seldom rivaled and not often surpassed for picturesqueness and grandeur in any other part of the country or the world. The ugly hand of commercialism has been laid upon them. The cliffs are being defaced and demolished by trap-rock quarrying.

They are admired today by all lovers of nature who have opportunity for gazing upon them as they have been for generations and for centuries. They form one of the priceless attractions of the region lying around the greatest city of the country.

Unsightly factories will soon invade them. As they become commercialized their value increases and the farther they become removed from public ownership and control. They could once have been purchased from private owners at a very low price and they should have been created a state reservation long ago. At all events, a bill is now before the New York Legislature whose purpose is to embrace them in a state park as a memorial to Henry Hudson, who sailed up the river in the Half Moon, and to Robert Fulton, who navigated it in the Clermont.

It is deemed most fitting that the dedication of this park shall mark the Robert Fulton memorial services, which are to occur next fall. For some reason, however, the measure providing for it is apparently being "held up" by the committee on ways and means at Albany, and lest seeming public apathy would justify its pigeonholing, the New York city newspapers, and notably the Times, are urging that telegrams and letters demanding prompt action on the bill be addressed to Assemblyman Merritt, chairman of the com-

As in the case of the Yosemite, the Yellowstone, Niagara Falls and other of our magnificent natural attractions which were threatened with invasion and destruction, the entire country is interested in the preservation of the scenery of the Hudson, and if by any chance New York state should fail of its duty in this particular, there is no question but that the federal government would be invited to step between the highlands and the spoilers.

The English Temperance Movement

THE VICIOUS old saying that when England got herself into debt she proceeded to drink herself out is in a wholesome way to becoming as extinct as the old public house signs, "Here a man may be made drunk for two-pence." For years past the drink bill of the nations has been declining annually by millions; restaurants in which intoxicants are not sold, which can scarcely be said to have more than existed a few years ago, are today probably more numerous than those in which they are; only quite recently the second reading of a bill passed the House of Commons for the closing of public houses on Sunday; and now, by an overwhelming majority, the House has passed the second reading of a bill for the closing of public houses on election days.

The scenes depicted in Hogarth's picture of the election have, of course, long ceased to take place. The days, as the under-secretary of state for home affairs admitted, in giving the bill the support of the government, "when a by-election was an orgy and a general election a national saturnalia" have passed away, but, as the introducer of the bill contended, that is no reason why every conceivable thing should not be done to prevent treating, which so long as the public houses remain open it is easier to do in theory than in practise.

The argument, on the other hand, of an opponent of the bill that it would encourage drinking owing to the thirst of those who had been prevented drinking all day having to be satisfied when the public houses reopened was a trifle strained. A man who deliberately remained thirsty all day in the presence of innumerable temperance restaurants would surely be something in the nature of a curiosity.

The bill really is a hardship to no one, and cannot fail to be beneficial to many, and that this was the view taken by the House was proved by the figures in the division, 199 votes to 46.

THE NEW YORK Assembly has refused to put telegraphs and telephones under the public service commissioners, a reservation which has aroused uncomplimentary comment.

ATTORNEY MILBURN has a beautiful faith in the Standard Oil Company. He didn't smile when he told the court that it was the greatest developer of the nation's home and foreign commerce.

Marvelous Rise of the Beet Sugar Industry It is not likely that the provision of the Senate finance committee tariff measure which permits Philippine sugar to the extent of 300,000 tons annually to enter this country free of duty is regarded as a serious menace to their industry by the beet sugar men, else it could not have got by the subcommittee consisting of Messrs. Burrows, Smoot and Flint, representing the sugar-producing states of Michigan, Utah and California. It is said that what the American producers fear most is an attempt in debate to bring in the so-called sugar trust, as some of the Democratic senators have threatened to do. The Democratic ranks are far from being solid, however, with relation to a sugar duty, as the cane sugar states are lined up for mutual protection with the beet-sugar states. In this connection some facts with regard to the growth of the beet-sugar industry will be interesting, regardless of views held on the tariff.

Prior to the adoption of the Dingley protective tariff in July, 1897, the production of beet-sugar in the United States ranged from 285 tons in 1888 to 32,726 tons in 1896. Although the tariff was only effective for eleven months and five days of 1898, the production rose to 42,245 tons. Nine years later, in 1907, it was more than ten times as large, namely, 483,611 tons. The following figures from the United States department of commerce and labor, bureau of statistics, show the production in tons for a period of eight years:

Year	Tons	Year	`Tons
1900	81,697	1904	240,604
1901	86,082	1905	242,113
1902	184,606	1906	312,920
1903	173,155	1907	483,611

One of the most important results of establishing the industry in the United States is revealed by a table based upon factory tables of disbursements and the latest estimates of the 1908-9 crop by the department of agriculture, as follows:

, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,	1908 1898 to 1908
For beets$21,	867,000 $141,737,774
	146,000 13,909,968
	185,000 1,199,135
For limerock	666,000 4,316,887
For sacks and barrels	073,000 6,954,984
For sundry supplies	073,000 6,954,984
Salaries of officers, clerks, etc	703,000 4,556,714
	737,000 24,222,530
For repairs and new machinery 1,	332,000 8,633,773
0	294,000 14,869,276
Freight on sugar at 30c per 100 lbs 2,	781,000 16,881,198
Total

According to the American Sugar Industry and Beet-Sugar Gazette, if the vast sums invested in lands and railroads connected with the industry, or made necessary by its establishment, were added to the disbursements shown above, they would appear to have reached close to $500,000,000 in the past ten years.

That it is a great industry is clear. That it has grown marvelously within a decade is self-evident. That it is an industry which is of widespread importance is plain. The things that we still have to learn with regard to it are: How much more protection does it need? and How much regulation can it stand?

The United States treasury receipts for the first seven days of April show a surplus of $1,061,000. A year ago for the first seven days of April there was a deficit of $3,292,000. This is most encouraging, but it must be remembered that a deficiency of over $100,000,000 must be made up, and, moreover, it should not be permitted to lead us into any new extravagances.

Shall There

Be Compul-

In RELATION to the electrification of the railroads in Chicago it is well to go back a decade or so when the movement for the abolition of the grade crossing was set on foot. The railroads then centering in the great lakeside metropolis declared they would resist to the uttermost every step taken in the direction of track elevation. They employed eminent and expensive legal counsel to advise them and they were advised that the city could not by ordinance compel them to raise the levels of their rights of way. The city, on the other hand, was advised by its law department that under the police powers vested in municipalities, it could compel the railroads to raise their tracks in the interest of public safety.

The dispute remains unsettled, but the railroads have elevated their roadbeds. Almost every line entering Chicago is above the street level. The railroads never pressed their protest in court because, it is said, a decision would render them subject to trackraising ordinances in every other city, town and village of the state. Apparently track elevation in Chicago was brought about by mutual agreement between the municipality and the railroads; in reality it was brought about by compulsion.

Mr. Harriman's statement a few days ago, referred to in these columns, to the effect that the Illinois Central would not electrify its lines into Chicago unless the city assumed half the cost of the undertaking, is likely to lead to another important test of municipal police power in that community. Although the corporation counsel has advised the mayor that the city lacks authority to compel a railroad to electrify its terminals to abate the smoke nuisance, many lawyers disagree with him. However, legislation is being provided which will overcome the difficulties discovered by the city's legal adviser. This is in the nature of an amendment to the city and villages act authorizing cities to prescribe the motive power by which cars may be operated within the limits of communities. No matter how beneficial it may be to municipalities, such legislation will prove extremely costly to the railroads, since it will enable hundreds of smaller communities to enforce conditions which graceful compliance with a reasonable demand would have confined for a long time to very large cities, and, perhaps, exclusively to Chicago.

We would like to call attention to the fact that tactfulness always goes a great deal farther than stubbornness and we do not believe the railroad corporations will give an opportunity for the establishment of precedents which will affect not alone the companies/ operating in Illinois but those in practically every state in the Union.

THE ORDER removing brass figureheads from the battleships might be extended with propriety to figureheads of all kinds, brass or otherwise, wherever found.

Secretary of War Dickinson is evidently going to be one of the frank diplomatists who isn't afraid to talk quite naturally and sensibly to the people about questions that interest us all.

THE TARIFF measure prepared by the Senate finance committee, practically a substitute for the Payne bill, and which for convenience's sake will be known, for the present at least, as the Aldrich bill, seems to be based upon the proposition that there is no great occasion for serious increases in the duties on imports by reason of the deficit in the treasury. On all necessaries especially, the rates in the bill reported to the Senate yesterday are lower. All items in the liquor schedule, however, are increased. Luxuries must pay higher taxes. The increase on wines and spirits is expected to produce $3,000,000 of new revenue.

Senate Tariff Bill

The old duties on hosiery and gloves have been restored. In the cotton industries there is an extension of the specific rates to cover a class of fancy goods and novelties which are covered in the existing law by ad valorem rates. The resulting ad valorem rates have not been increased. Cocoa has been returned to the free list, as has also common earthenware. The only change in the lumber schedule is the placing of imported hardwoods on the free list. The sugar schedule remains as it came from the House.

On two points all the Washington correspondents seem to be in agreement—firstly, that a fight on free hides and free coal is inevitable, and, secondly, that the finance committee has reserved for future introduction many important amendments. One of these, it is said, contemplates further advances on luxuries.

The Senate committee seems on the whole to have worked pretty closely along the lines of the Dingley act. There are numerous changes, but they are of minor character. No radical provisions appear in the bill. As to taxation outside of duties on imports for national revenue purposes, Senator Aldrich's remark to the effect that it would not be necessary is very significant.

PROHIBITION by means of boycott is a novel method of reform, but it appears to be working well in Finland. The Russian government refused to sanction prohibition for Finland because it needed the money from the liquor tax. Now the Finns declare they won't go near a saloon for six months and nearly all the men in the country have agreed to the boycott.

The Government and an Old Debt THERE IS an interesting bit of national politico-financial history again brought into exploitation by the bill of Representative Murdock of Kansas, in relation to recalling the government's surplus on deposit with the various states under the act of 1836. It is not believed that the bill will be passed, although it is conceded that the several states interested could pay back the money without hardship. It was in 1836 that as a result of unprecedented sales of public land the United States treasury found itself in possession of an embarrassing surplus. Apparently its revenues were going to continue to exceed by millions its annual expenditures. In those days the activities of the federal government were confined within comparatively narrow limits. Its affairs were at the high tide of prosperity. On the other hand, the states had, or felt they had, many and pressing problems. They were young; their resources were only becoming visible. It was not a wise policy to keep money stored in the national treasury that could be used for development purposes in the states. Moreover, a surplus invited extravagance. The way out of all this was to deposit the surplus with the several states, in proportion to their respective representation in Congress. The following is an exhibit of the amount which each state received and the amount to which it is indebted to the national treasury at the present time:

Maine, $956,000; Maryland, $956,000; New Hampshire, $669,000; Vermont, $669,000; Massachusetts, $1,338,000; Connecticut. $756,000; Rhode Island, $382,-000; New York, $4,015,000; Pennsylvania, $2,868,000; New Jersey. $765,000; Ohio, $2,007,000; Indiana, $860,000; Michigan, $287,000; Virginia, $2,199,000; North Carolina, $1,440,000; South Carolina, $1,051,000; Georgia, $1,051,000; Alabama, $669,000; Louisiana, $478,000; Mississippi, $382,000; Tennessee, $1,434,000; Kentucky, $1,424,000; Missouri, $382,000; Arkansas, $287,000; Delaware, $287,000.

Every year since these deposits were made the treasurer of the United States has reported in his schedule of the "unavailable funds of the government" the $28,100,000 thus distributed. It has always been pronounced "unavailable" simply because Congress has never authorized steps for the withdrawal of the deposits. The money would have been very useful to the national government a short time after the deposits were made, because a panic ensued which emptied the treasury. However, this panic also rendered the states incapable of responding in case a demand had been made for the deposits.

Representative Murdock believes that, in view of the present deficit in the treasury, and the efforts of the government to increase its revenues, this would be a good time to take some action in the premises.

Many states have contributed in so many ways toward the upkeep of the national government since 1836—have responded so generously to its calls in recent years—are manifestly so ready at any time to help it should it get into any kind of trouble—that insistence by the federal authorities on the collection of this old debt might not be regarded as an ungracious act. And more especially since what the government is in need of is not revenue from extraordinary sources, but ordinary economy.
